"The Comix"

"The Comix" were a small series of short and simple comics featuring basic hand-drawn figures, absurd humor, and inspired by moments of sheer boredom.

Author's Note:

The title is deliberately in quotation marks because I wouldn't really refer to it that way in an official capacity. It's simply the name of the folder that survived three generations of computers.

When I was around 10, I created each of the comics that you are about to read. I used to own a touchscreen all-in-one computer, which is also where my journey into digital art began. I drew these comics by hand and applied my sense of absurd humor, which still holds to this day to my delightful surprise.

You will notice that some of the comics resemble the earliest memes on the internet. I vividly remember drawing these comics when I was really bored. I cannot deny that the resemblance is there.

Another thing you will notice is there is at least one triangle in each comic with a dot. Yes, this is a reference to the Illuminati. I drew these comics back when such internet trends were popular, and I had made a video about it using the old Movie Maker for Windows 8/10.

According to my file "The Comix", I had in fact serialized them. The image on the previous and next page are actually not labeled as "The Comix" but were still in that file so I thought to include them.

Looking at "The Comix", I am once again reminded of my own roots. It's weird how your previous work, even the stuff you barely put effort into, can cause you to reflect so deeply. I hope to replicate the humor and silly themes that I used many years ago. After all, those who bring their inner child into their creative work are usually the ones that succeed the most.

WAIT!

YUM!

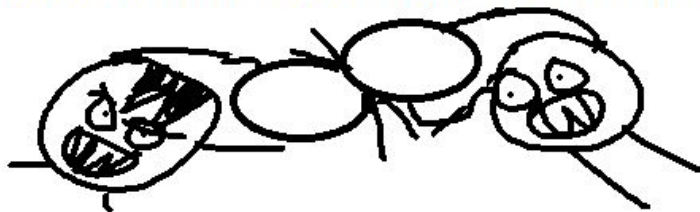

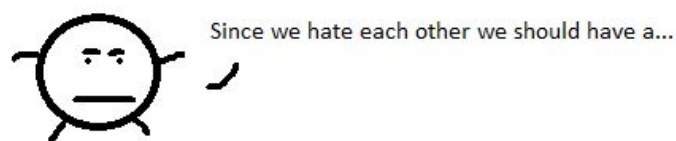

YOU ATE IT!! NO! I KNEW
IT WAS GONNA BE A
TRICK! AUGH!!!

Chomp!

WHA-AUGH!!

TRANSPARENT WATERMELON FIGHT!!!

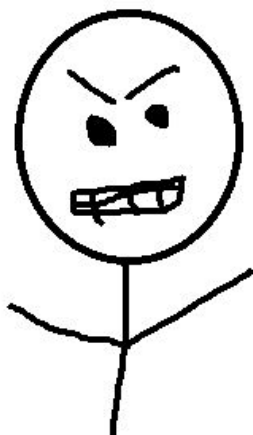

Twinkle, twinkle, little star how I wonder so much that my head explodes into many different particles of wierdness.

Wow, you sure have tons to say about that singular star.

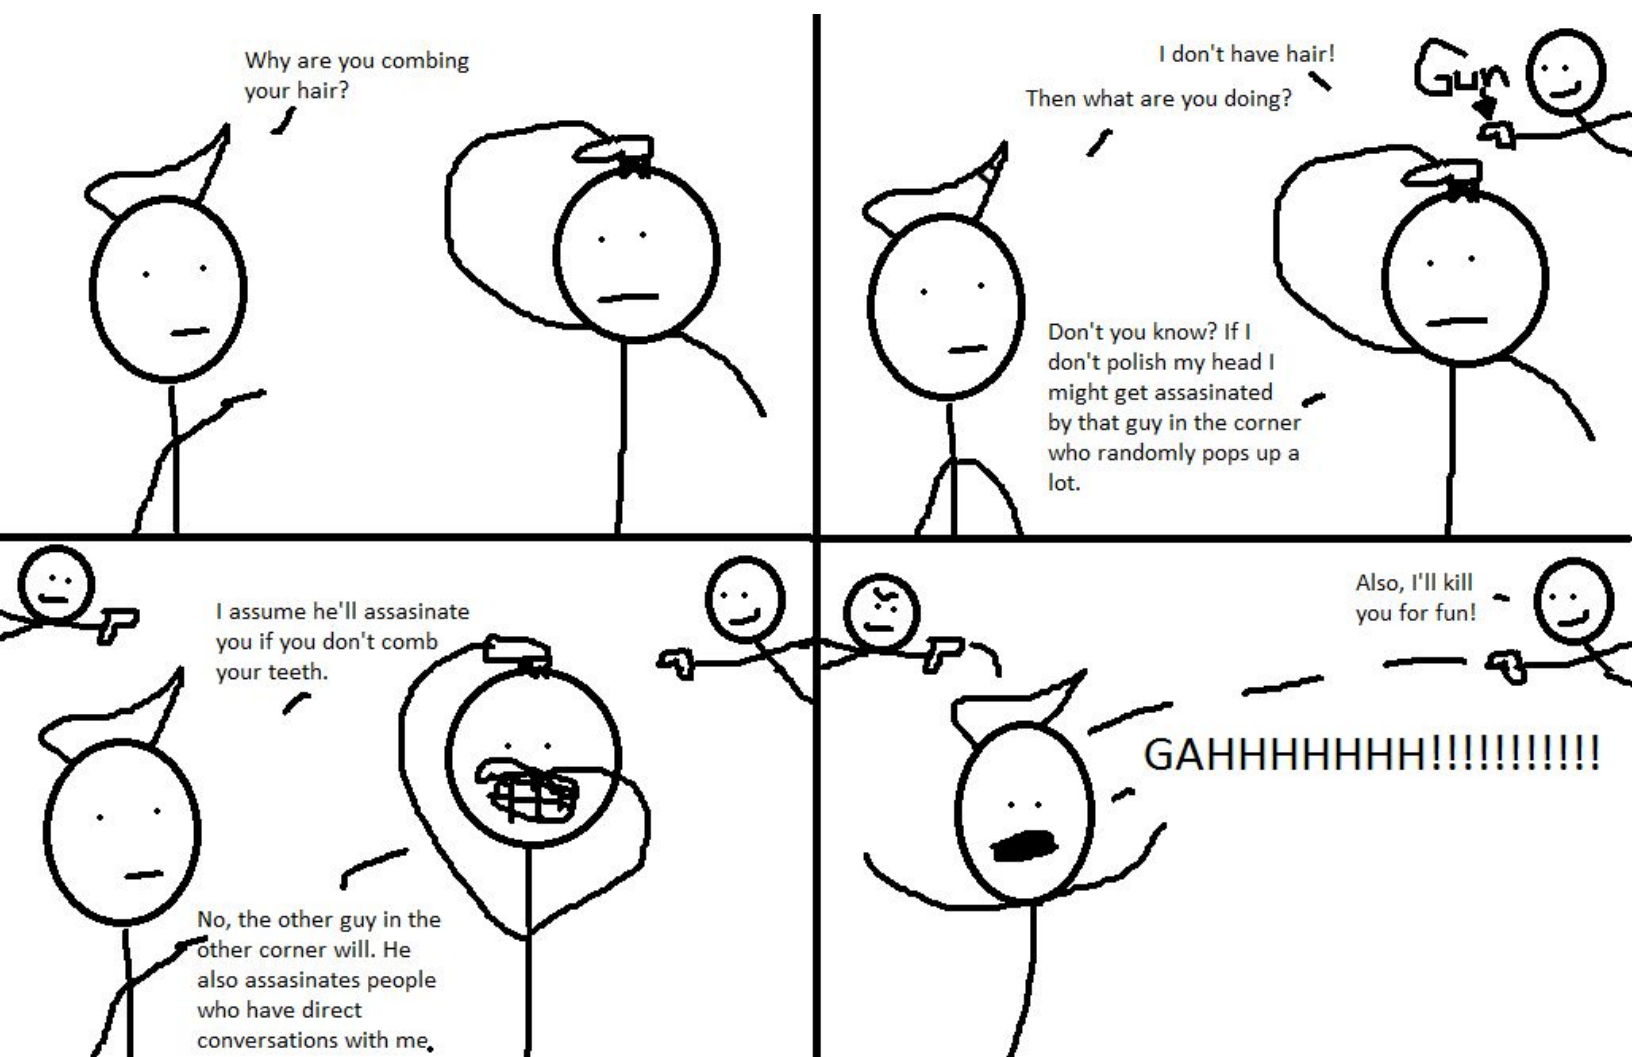

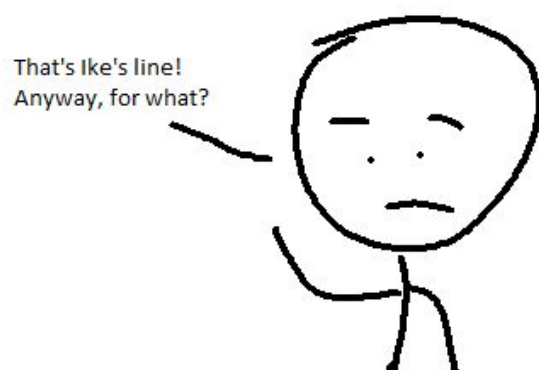

Of course I do! It's the same star my mother and I would look at before her head literally exploded from it!

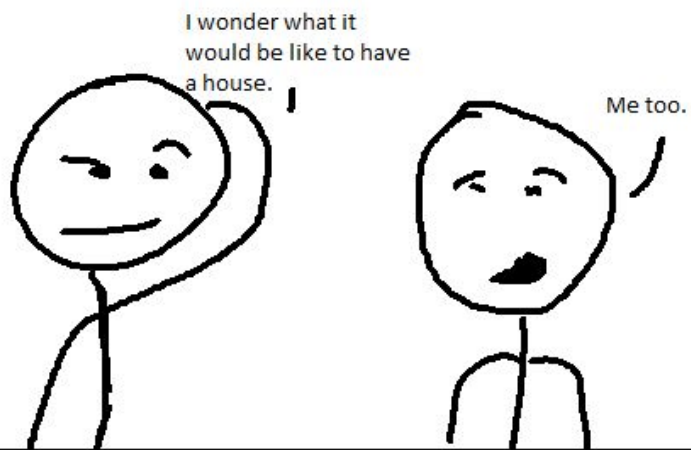

Oh, I did not know that. I am truly sorry.
